

This is Not a solo dance

a dance dedicated to all womxn

Description

The mandarin character 'woman (女)' has three strokes; it's expected to be written in a set order. If not written in the order, does the writing still make a 'woman'?

This performance is inspired by Chinese calligraphy and realised through performative drawing. The performer transforms the strokes into dance and embarks on the conversation between herself and the world and within.

This is Not a solo dance is a 20-minute-long tailored digital counterpart of the performance under the influence of the pandemic.

*This project is supported by Taiwan's Cultural and Arts Foundation.

云云 Yun Collective

founded in 2019, explores femininity through bodies and performative objects.

They aim to blur the boundary between performances and static exhibitions.
